HR Executives of America's Large Employers Announce Enhanced Website

Jobipedia.org Upgraded to Better Help Jobseekers

Washington, D.C. – Today, hiring and recruiting professionals representing over 30 of America's large employers announce the updated jobipedia.org website. Jobipedia.org is a free service and resource, created in 2012 and designed specifically for entry level job seekers looking for advice to support their path to employment, but can be used by anyone looking for honest and reliable career advice for any stage of their career.

Every answer on jobipedia.org is written by a professional currently employed to hire and recruit at a jobipedia.org contributing company. All the advice and answers provided on the site are written by an expert who meets and interviews prospective hires on a regular basis. And each question has at least one answer posted within one to two days of when the question was submitted.

Jobipedia.org Executive Director Michael Z. McGuiness said, "We are excited about the new look and feel of the updated jobipedia.org website. We believe this site enhances the ability for jobseekers and students to find the answers they need in their job seeking process. It also makes it easier for visitors to pose a new question to our recruiting and hiring experts."

The revisions to the jobipedia.org website include many user-friendly upgrades such as a more visible search feature and clearer categories of questions and answers. The site also has a new look, incorporating the "search, ask and browse" tabs on top of a bulletin board-style backdrop.
