Jobipedia Helps Students Generate Resumes for Free

Launched in May 2016, the Jobipedia Resume Generator has helped over 700 students and recent graduates create their first resumes. Designed in collaboration with members of talent acquisition teams from companies like Cardinal Health, Textron and Mutual of Omaha, the resume generator is just another free resource available on Jobipedia.

The resume generator's online form outlines what questions a job seeker should answer, and the necessary information a recruiter or hiring manager wants to see when reviewing a candidate. Once a job seeker has added their information, the resume generator creates a downloadable Word document in the preferred format of many hiring experts that contribute to Jobipedia.

Mike McGuiness, Executive Director of Jobipedia, said, "We're always looking to develop tools and resources that support students and interns on their path to employment. Your resume is an advertisement of yourself to potential employers. Students need to include the right information on their resume and, most importantly, their information needs to be displayed in a way that's easy for a hiring manager or recruiter to review."

Students and recent graduates find the resume generator to be a useful resource because it alleviates the concern that they may not be structuring their resume correctly, or they may be missing information that's important to an employer. The fact that the resume generator is free is just an added bonus.

The layout used for each resume was developed by individuals currently hiring and recruiting for some of America's largest companies. McGuiness added, "Our contributing hiring experts have seen and reviewed thousands of resumes. So, when they suggest what to include and where to include it, we listen."

College career offices and career counselors utilize the resume generator because it comes from a reliable source. Career counselors confidently point students to Jobipedia to create a resume in advance of a career consultation because it makes the student think about their personal experiences and skills. In effect, the career consultation can revolve around discussing possible companies to work for and networking opportunities for that student. And that resume created on Jobipedia can be reviewed and polished with the career counselor.
